ONE WAY TO FISH.

There are men who take their angling seriously; men of the rod and reel who make their own files and bestow an infinite care on the selection of spinners and all manner of lures; men who heartfly agree with the great Izaak Walton that just "as no man is born an artist, so no man is born an angler. When such a man goes gravely forth to fish, the day should be overcast, to match his plous mood. He has business of import ahead of him, and the only conversation that is tolerable must be in consonance with the spirit of the occasion and must relate directly to the matter in hand, says Philadelphia Press. That is one way to fish; the scientific, sacramental way. There is another type of angler of whom this other highly disapproves. He is vulgar enough to select a day of rank sunshine. He says, when reasoned with, that he finds it better so. He is also peculiar in his selection of a fishing ground, asserting that it doesn't matter much so long as it embraces a shady nook in some quiet retreat. He may throw out a line-he very probably does-but not until he has first attended to his lunch basket, which he stoutly maintains is a far more important Item of a fishing outfit than the creel. And yet the man who fishes in this eccentric way is broadly just towards the other man-his fellow-

One of the large British transportation companies has contracted for the construction of ten steamers for service between British ports and ports on the River Platte. These steamers will be equipped for the carrying of chilled beef, which is finding great favor in Europe, and will also have inviting passenger accommodations for the increasing tourist traffic to South America. The order for this fleet is important chiefly because of its significance to the meat business. The world's supply of meat is short of the demands of population, and now that the people of the United States are themselves suffering from the same shortage they have more interest in South American meat developments.

Tramps and vagrants generally who are opposed to work of any kind will do well to keep away from the vicinity of Kansas for some time to come. The judge of the municipal court in Kansas City announces that he will sentence all vagrants brought before him to labor in the fields. If they refuse to go he will send them to the workhouse for slx months, and that will be worse than grain harvesting. Men of this class perhaps do not make the best or most efficient help on the farm, but at this season there is an urgent demand for workers of any kind, and even a tramp can be made useful in gathering the crops.

"It's as easy to light as a gas jet. Famous Angle Lamp Never smokes or smells wanther burned at full height or turned low like gas. It is not merely an ordinary lamp improved. It is an entirely new method of oil lighting. For simplicity and convenience of operation it is the closest rival of gas or electricity. For splendid reading light and artistic general illumination it is the superior of either. The angle at which the flame burns throws the best light from its most brilliant surface airectly downward. The effect of the light is doubled, producing a reading light with which no other system can even compare. Yet the Angle Lamp is the most sconomical of all lighting methods. Costs less to burn than even the ordinary lamp-fully ½ less.
